

About the History of Housing Policy in the U.K.

BFI. Many of the leading documentary filmmakers of the 1930s believed that their films had a purpose to improve people's lives. Housing conditions were a key social concern, and remained so at least until the 1960s. These works include Housing Problems, a landmark film in the history of British documentary filmmaking, which retains its powerful impact

Read more: <http://beta.bfi.org.uk/4e3032b63987e>

The BFI is the UK's lead film organisation.

In its mission to achieve a creative and prosperous film culture and industry base, the BFI drives creative, economic, and cultural success through a linked portfolio of activities.

<http://beta.bfi.org.uk/>